

Suburb Archives – 1911 Census Project

The original proposal to carry out an analysis of the 1911 census was put forward to the Suburb Archives by Micky Watkins in early 2016. The purpose was to analyse the roads then existing to determine the age, sex and occupations of the early residents and to get an insight into the lives of the first residents.

Andrew Glendinning carried out an analysis of Temple Fortune Hill and the results encouraged the Suburb Archives to expand this into a full survey of the Suburb roads existing in 1911.

In June 2016 an initial meeting of the volunteers (Janice Blackstaffe, Judy Dodds, Janet Elliott, Mary Fraser, Andrew Glendinning, Linda Lewis, Kate Webster and Micky Watkins) was held and each volunteer was given a number of roads to analyse.

The source of the information came from Ancestry.com starting with the Census summary sheets which gave details of the occupied houses and the names of the heads of households. This information was then used to access the individual census records for each household which gave details of the names, sexes, ages and occupations of the residents and where they came from.

These details were put on a spreadsheet for each road and the summary information transferred to a summary sheet.

By early 2017 most of the roads had been covered and some interesting results were being uncovered:

- Many roads were still under construction
- In some roads the average age of the Heads of Household was under 35 years
- Groupings of similar occupations in the same road
- Census forms spoiled by protesting Suffragists
- Houses were renumbered
- Substantial numbers of live-in servants
- Significant numbers of residents had moved from outside London

Cottages in Wild Hatch predated the construction of the Suburb. These appeared in the censuses of 1901 and 1891 and were occupied by farmers and cowmen.

Most roads have now been analysed and we hope to publish further findings from this project in the near future
